President Bush named Dr. Betsy Rogers National Teacher of the Year in an April White House ceremony, in which he referred to her as "an example of the highest professional standards and the finest personal qualities." Rogers holds the distinction of being the first teacher from Alabama to capture the national title.

Recently Governor Bob Riley held a ceremony at the Governor's Mansion honoring Dr. Betsy Rogers for her work and dedication. In honor of Dr. Rogers' accomplishments, Bob Riley presented her with a proclamation declaring June 11, 2003 as Dr. Betsy Rogers Day in Alabama. "We are fortunate in the great state of Alabama to have teachers of Betsy's caliber inspiring our young men and women to achieve excellence." Riley said.

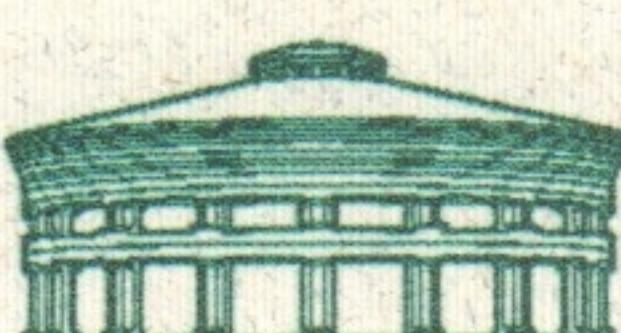

A first and second grade teacher at Leeds Elementary School, Dr. Rogers has been commended by the President and by her colleagues for choosing to teach in an underprivileged area. She has been credited with subscribing to the philosophy that children from every background deserve the best leaders. Rogers will spend the next year as a full-time national and international spokesperson for education.
